The flashy charges of head coach Don Adey and his assistant, Larry Swartz, ended the '69-'70 basketball season in spectacular fashion, winning an amazing fourteen out of their last fifteen games. It's been many a year since so many bouquets have been awarded to such a large representation of players for so much.

Early in the season the "experts" were not mentioning the Spartans with any amount of enthusiasm as possible contenders for the Metro championship. But, as the season wore on and the string of victories became impressive, the prognosticators began to "sit up and take notice" of those "smoothies" down south of the rubber city border.

Rangy, elusive, playing the game cool at both ends offensively and defensively, the Spartans could not be headed. The cry went up around the league, "Stop the Spartans!" but there was no turning back the hilltop avengers. With finesse and dogged determination they accepted all challengers and overcame the oft-threatening opposition. And they did it in the only way they knew how — as gentlemen. Both on and off the floor they are young men in the finest of traditions. Their school, their families and society can be proud of their accomplishments.

The Junior Varsity is a very essential part of a Varsity's claim to fame, and the hard work on the part of the Junior Varsity helped Springfield win the Metro Championship in 1970.

With membership double that of last year, Student Council has found itself able to do more than in past years. This student organization contracted the project of building a school in an underdeveloped part of the world. This project involved raising one thousand dollars for the Peace Corps, who supervise the construction, and carrying on correspondence with the school. Such an endeavor is truly worthwhile because students of both schools benefit.

Student Council members were not the only participants. In most cases, they were the promoters; each school organization contributed to the effort.

D.C.T.

DIVERSIFIED COOPERATIVE TRAINING is a program designed to give those students, not going to college immediately after graduation, an opportunity to learn a skilled trade during their senior year. This is done by going to school for one-half day and working at the selected skill the remainder of the day. The student is paid the going rate for the work that is done on the job. A total of three credits is given for the completion of the course. Some jobs are referred to as pre-apprentice and lead directly to a four year apprentice program and top salary in that occupation.

Mr. Hanna advises Linda Hall.
